Your Baby's Health

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

Children differ considerably in the ways they develop their teeth. They differ even in the difficulties they have during teething. But even the healthiest children may be fretful and have poor sleep for two or three nights, when the first teeth come through.

They have a disposition to put fingers in their mouths and to indicate discomfort in other ways. Sometimes there is considerable drooling, or flow of saliva, with loss of appetite.

There also may be slight fever and looseness of the bowels, and the appearance of undigested foods in the excretions. In most instances, these symptoms will last only three or four days, and there may be no gain in weight for three or four weeks.

If symptoms of teething are severe, the mother should consult her doctor promptly for aid in prevention of pain, and in encouraging development of the teeth.

It is useful also to know the sequence in which the teeth usually appear. First come the two central lower teeth during the period from the fifth to the ninth month. Next are the four upper central teeth, which come in from the eighth to the twelfth month.

The other two lower central teeth and the four front double teeth follow in the twelfth to the eighteenth month. Altogether there are 20 teeth in the first set. The remainder appear between the eighteenth and the twenty-fourth months, excepting the four back double teeth, which usually appear between the twenty-fourth and thirtieth months, but may be even later.

The importance of teeth for health and long life cannot be overestimated. Few mothers realize that first attention to the teeth of the child must begin before the baby is born.

The mother should visit her own dentist early, as I pointed out in the series on prenatal care. She must keep her own teeth clean and take care of any cavities or decay which develop.

She must always eat the right foods, so that the child's teeth will develop properly. Proper foods for the expectant mother include plenty of milk, fresh vegetables, eggs, cooked fruits, cereals, and a sufficient amount of calories to provide energy.

The foods to be avoided are sweets and meat in excess, pastries, and highly seasoned substances.

Your Children

By Olive Roberts Barton

Each wave of thought that sweeps the shore of behavior leaves a little more sand behind it, and from each we learn something. Otherwise fads and reforms would go for nothing.

Not long ago, how well we remember, the scholars of child behavior were promoting happiness alone as a background for character, not merely happiness, but privilege to the point of license. "Self-expression" it was christened if you recall and was supposed to back inferiority off the map.

Experts Reverse View

Now the barrage of opposition is being heard over the general din. Up speak the good doctors today that doing things we don't like to do, placing our feelings and desires in the background and forgetting the "I" of it, makes men and women. And so it does, but it can discourage them, too.

"So what," ask Mr. and Mrs. Parent in bewilderment, "are we to do?"

Altogether I think there is too much positive opinion for-and-against the whole business. I believe the average child's life consists of "expressing" himself sometimes and "working against his will" at others, enough to let each influence get in its own good work.

Certainly children need to be happy. Adults do, too. This does not mean that any need to live in a perpetual state of excitement, going places, doing things, getting what we want. But though these be the savor of existence, a general state of well-being and security is what I mean by happiness.

Learn From Experience

There are many times when it is wise to give a child his head and let him win a victory without our meddling. Certainly this sets him up, gives him courage and adds inches to his self-esteem. The overly-regimented child loses spirit and interest after a while, or else he bottles up a vague resentment and a promise that someday, somehow, he will let go with a bang.

To this extent we would be wise to recognize the necessity for self-expression. Also praise and encouragement must be given their due as faith-promoters. The latter are particularly productive of results in your children.

And as for "doing things we hate to do," most of us get plenty of it and so do the children.

Children don't like errands, or school, or some tasks, or going to bed or practicing. They do them, though.

Remedy His Bull's-Eye

As for inferiority, it comes from a dread of other people, whether we are doing what we want or not. Some say it can be cured by doing things to other people, and I think this is a bull's eye indeed.

But there we strike another snag. We have known people to spend their lives doing favors from a poor motive; ingratiating themselves into the good graces of the favored. This is no remarkable virtue; it is an extreme form of fear or self-interest. To do favors from a general sense of duty is something else again.

Study the child. Mix the dose. He may need more string to act, or less, according to his nature. He may need more urging to do those things distasteful to him or be let off for a while. He should learn to disregard how he feels in a way, and lose his self-conscious sensitiveness. But no book can tell exactly how it is to be done, because your child is his own and no two are alike.

A Book a Day

By Bruce Catton

A great pitfall awaits the writer who would do a historical novel, and Vincent Sheean steps right into it in his new book, "Sanfelice" (Double-day-Doran: $2.50).

As history, his book is superb; as fiction, it is pretty shoddy. It makes tedious reading if you can just close your mind to the costume romance which accompanies it. Luckily, since that romance tends to get lost in the shuffle every few pages, that isn't hard to do.

Mr. Sheean tells about the kingdom of Naples of the late French revolutionary era. Its Bourbon rulers, with matchless folly, declared war on France and got roundly whipped, and a Jacobin republic was installed.

Then, with the help of England, Austria, and Russia, the Bourbons returned to power, butchered the Jacobins, and resumed business at the old stand.

Hollywood

By Paul Harrison

HOLLYWOOD—Miss Norma Shearer declines to be put into the category of tragedienne, or star of costume pictures. Her sequences of tragic roles and period plays don't mean a thing, she says.

Her next effort was to have been a light, modern comedy. The studio, however, happens to be just fresh out of light, modern comedies of the Shearer stature. So what she'll do next is "Marie Antoinette," as of the Zweig biography. Louis XVI will be in her cups, but remarkably short on both morals and intelligence.

But the fictional romance that goes with all this is right out of Hollywood. We get an adheerated lady of decayed aristocratic antecedents who is loved by three men, who falls for the least likely of the three, and who manages to conduct her love affair with such complete idiocy that she winds up by getting beheaded as a revolutionary.

However, you needn't let that worry you. With all its faults, "Sanfelice" is about as completely fascinating a book as you are apt to come across all summer.

Somebody Else Going to Take a Walk

—one guess—Charles Laughton.

Eighteenth-century Marie is a costume character, of course, but Miss Shearer will deny that she is wholly tragic. What if she did lose her head at the last minute? Marie lived 38 years, and her life was fuller than most.

Miss Shearer recently finished a representation of Juliet (which you will not see until early autumn) and she doesn't consider that a tragic role. It was an eager, ecstatic exit that the young man made.

"Remember," the actress reminded, "that she said, 'Oh, happy dagger!'"

Frankest of the Frank

One classification Miss Shearer can't escape—she is probably No. 1 on a pretty short list of stars who are completely enthusiastic about picture playing. It seems to me that many performers are inclined to be supercilious about the screen, and are forever voicing nostalgia for the tradition-laden theater—tut—tut—which they actually wouldn't return even if they could.

Miss Shearer has been in the movies 16 years, and still thinks Hollywood is swell. True, being the wife of Irving Thalberg, she enjoys a certain security, yet it may be all the more to her credit that she works as hard as she does and takes chances with such pictures as "Strange Interlude," "Romeo and Juliet," and now the biography of a tempestuous French queen.

Great Stories in History

She said: "I don't believe historical fare is the most popular thing to offer, but there's a growing taste for it. People like it—and I know I do, personally—if the history isn't dominant; if it serves only as background for strong stories about people.

"Marie Antoinette had a great love story; two loves, really—the Swedish count and then the king. And then there was all the gaiety and recklessness, and the transition to a woman of dignity, and then tragedy.

"But there's a lot of fun in it. I think anything all-tragic is merely dull. Mr. Laughton was so good as Henry VIII because his comedy pointed up the pathos, gave it poignancy.

"The stage has always concentrated on the heavy drama of 'Romeo and Juliet.' The picture tries to lighten it up. I never guessed that Shakespeare was really fun to read until I started studying my part."

CHAPTER XII

THE day following Phil's request that Marcia leave immediately was Sunday. Because it was, there was no train with proper accommodations until late in the morning. Marcia decided that she would slip away without goodbye to anyone except Marion who knew that she was leaving.

Marion, though, interfered with this arrangement. "By the way, we all meet in the dining room and get our own breakfasts on Sunday, when we have lots of people at the house," she said.

Marcia silently eliminated breakfast from her schedule. She was sitting in her room, the blue hat on, her face pale and her eyes ringed with violet, waiting for the station wagon, when Marion came into the room.

"Marcia Cunningham, you look like the last of the ten plagues of Israel! What in the world—but you have to have some breakfast before you go. You can't just sit here!"

So she went into the dining room, and perfunctorily poured some coffee and spattered a wafer iron with batter.

Camilla was making pancakes and creaming beef to go with them. At first the significance of this action was lost on Marcia. Then she realized that Camilla was making very good pancakes and the creamed meat looked tempting. Camilla could cook! Well, Phil wouldn't be hungry, anyway, in the Pampas.

HER own waffles were ready and she put them on a plate. To prolong the motion of doing something she pretended that she would like some bacon and covered the waffles to keep them hot. Phil had drawn near. He had a coffee cup in one hand.

"Phil, you haven't eaten?" she said. "Here, take this. I'll fix some more."

"Marcia, don't tempt me! That's a dish fit for a king instead of a poor engineer!" He looked at it hungrily. "Cam's getting some pancakes and stuff ready for two or three of us and I'm pledged elsewhere!"

Cam's bright voice broke into the conversation. She carried a plate in each hand and Bob was with her.

"Here, my lollipops,"—she motioned to the two men—"I've prepared your food. Now draw up your chairs and eat while I prepare refills."

The station wagon was rounding the corner. Relievedly, Marcia picked up her bag and gloves. With a quick goodbye to Marion, she slipped out of the room, ran across the veranda, climbed into the wagon.

She was running away again, running away this time because she had been asked to go. Phil might have been a little more attentive, she mused, as the wagon started.

"Marcia, wait! Hey, driver—" She heard a voice calling her. She knew that it came from Phil but she did not look back. "Never mind, please," she told the driver. "I think we had better hurry."

THERE was no boat for three days, she learned in Paris.

The morning of the third day the clerk told her that Camilla was registered once more.

"Oh yes," she repeated. That must mean that Phil had come, too, and he would see that she had not left.

"Both young gentlemen are with her," the clerk added. "There is to be a wedding at the American embassy at noon, but you probably know that."

"Yes, yes, of course," she answered, and went out to walk in the rain that was just beginning. She decided that she would take her luggage and go at once to Cherbourg and stay there until the boat sailed the next afternoon at 6.

It was dusk when she came back to the hotel. She stepped aside to watch a porter carrying out some luggage. "C. M." She read the initials on the bags. Camilla Howe. The wedding was over. She saw more bags in the arms of another porter. "P. B." So there had been a wedding! Not until then did she realize that somewhere, in the far corners of her mind, she had been hoping that it might be Bob whom Camilla was marrying. She knew now. That was something.

Her feet dragged as she walked to the elevator. She could feel the water oozing in her slippers and did not care. A girl stepped from the car as Marcia waited for the passengers to leave. Glancing up, she saw Camilla.

"Marcia! We scoured the city for you! Wish me luck, honey! I'm married, and I wanted you there!"

"I hope you'll be ever so happy, Camilla. I know you will. Phil's a darling—" She wondered at the clearness of her own voice.

"Phil? But it wasn't Phil, Marcia. I married Bob!"

"Bob?" Marcia's eyes grew wider and grayer. "Camilla, you married Bob?"

The other girl sobered. "I know what you are thinking—that Bob wanted money and I haven't any. This time he did fall in love, Marcia. Forgive me for being so plain. He's glad that I haven't anything so he can earn it for us. Bob is turning out to be—swell!"

Then she was gone before Marcia could explain that she hadn't meant that at all—that she was surprised—she couldn't very well admit that she was delighted—that it wasn't Phil. But Phil's luggage was going somewhere—

Marcia hurried to the desk. "Mr. Kirkby—when did he check out?"

"Two hours ago. His bags are following him to Cherbourg. He's gone to his boat."

"His boat? But there's no boat leaving for New York until tomorrow!"

"He's sailing to Rio de Janeiro." So Phil was leaving, believing that she had not cared to answer when he called! He couldn't do that. He loved her!

"May I have a porter in a hurry?" she asked the clerk. "And prepare my bills, please. I'm checking out immediately."

Hats, gowns, suits, coats, those with a Paris label and those without, went into the bags. Toilet articles, stockings, shoes, handkerchiefs—they were packed in a few minutes and the bags were closed. The porter put them in a cab and Marcia gave hurried directions.

"The boat train to Cherbourg." The rain was falling in a steady downpour when she reached the tender that would carry her to the big ship. The last-minute confusion of sailing was progressing a little wearily. Marcia felt let down. Phil had not been on the train and she had not found him on the tender. But he must be on the boat. Yet she had not seen him when the engines began to groan and the gangplank was taken up. The night grew darker. She climbed the narrow iron steps to the upper deck and sat down in a lifeboat. When the confusion was over she would ask for his cabin.

Then she saw him. He was standing near a smokestack, hands in his pockets, eyes on the vanishing coastline.

"Phil!" She called softly. He turned, wondering, and waited.

"Phil!" She climbed down from the boat.

This time he turned and came to her. "Marcia!" His hands held hers tightly and his eyes searched her face. "What are you doing here?"

"Sailing."

"But the boat isn't going to New York, Marcia. It's bound for South America. You mean you knew—"

Her heart stirred suddenly under the gladness that leaped into the watching blue eyes.

"The ship is going to Paradise," she answered. "It's a wonderful place, Paradise. I've never been there, but once you showed me a spire!"

THE END

Culture vs. Learning
Mention of Shakespeare and history somehow sidetracked us on the subject of education. Miss Shearer is one who wouldn't trade an ounce of culture for a year of formal learning. Especially for women.

She believed women learn best from life and can absorb factual education painlessly as they go along.

Examples: the hundreds of bright, personable, articulate, wellread actresses in Hollywood today. Most of them have had to begin their careers so early that there wasn't any time for college. But a lot of them have done very creditably by the leisure that has accompanied success.

Miss Shearer has made plans for being pleasantly indolent this summer. She is a contemplative person, who considers laziness a virtue. But there'll be only a month's vacation, after all.

August will be a trying period of story conferences and costume fittings. Production begins in September. Following that, she'll appear in "Friede and Prejudice," and then maybe a light modern comedy.

And so on and on, for no possible reason except that Miss Shearer likes the movies.

World armament cost $2,531,000,000 in 1913. In 1934, it cost more than $7,600,000,000.

"Why I Switched to Dodge"

by GEORGE DEWITT SHEETS, Cranford, N. J.

I traded in my small car to get a big Dodge "Beauty Winner." It was one of the best moves I ever made.

Why? Because, in the long run, I figure this big Dodge is actually going to cost me less than the small car I had.

For example, I'm getting 21 miles per gallon of gasoline—and I haven't added any oil between changes. And Dodge is so easy to buy! One can get a Dodge for not much more than $25 per month! It's easy to see why more people buy Dodge cars than any other make, with the exception of the three lowest-priced cars!

Al Jolson's Film at the Saenger

"The Singing Kid" Is on Local Screen Thursday and Friday

"The Singing Kid," latest gigantic musical spectacle with Al Jolson in the stellar role, comes to the Saenger Theater Thursday and Friday.

The picture combines hilarious comedy with heart throbbing drama, spectacular specialty numbers and catchy new popular songs. It is a colorful production with the glittering background of New York show life, with beautiful chorus and dancing girls, and fifty undulating struttin' truckin' black beauties right from Harlem, mostly members of the "Blackbirds."

"The Cotton Club Revue" and other shows.

The story concerns a Broadway entertainer who loses his voice after his fiancée and his manager have robbed him of every cent he has and then eloping. He recuperates at an outdoor camp where he falls in love with a real girl, who pits him, however, when she finds he has instigated the purchase of a play she has written, and which proves to be worthless. Everything ends in a blaze of glory, however, with the entertainer back on Broadway, and his true love at his side.

There is a brilliant supporting cast which includes Sybil Jason, the baby star, Beverly Roberts, Edward Everett Horton, Lyle Talbot, Allen Jenkins, Claire Dodd.

Novel Title a True Story

In contrast to Mary Roberts Rhinehart's splendid new novel, "The Doctor," which, while fictitious, yet is the true story of thousands of young physicians who meet trials, face disappointments, work on because their lives are cast with people who need them and they find happiness in service to them, not in escape. Noel Arden, in the story, knew that it was better to heal broken bodies—and broken spirits—than to attempt to pretend that bodies are immune from pain. After all, we are not gods. We are only men. We can never fly.

This time of transition, in which we are passing from an age of family physicians to an age of specialists, is a trying one. It takes all the strength and technique and skill of a medical man.

Must Lose to Gain Happiness

Dr. Ritter, who tried to prove his worth, by looking to his own welfare, failed miserably. We are our brothers' keepers, as a Great Physician told us long ago. Not our brothers' jailers. Just keepers—when we have success to give which these need. When we accept this responsibility, service becomes a job. We find our happiness when we lose it.

We might take ships and sail to the Galapagos tomorrow. We might enjoy the first two weeks or the first two months. When we had had all the sleep we needed and our tan is an old story, most of us—almost all of us—would watch for a sail at sea. We are happiest when we are busiest, when we realize that we have responsibilities to meet which draw us into the design of living. Furthermore—few of us, in the long run, are willing to discard the scientific benefits which have accrued from civilized living.

If all the waterfalls of the world were harnessed, they could furnish only 10 per cent of the power being used today.

Sweden Backs New 'Garbo'

American movie fans soon may come face to face with a new "Garbo" from Sweden—the lovely Ingrid Bergman, who, at 18, has captured the hearts of European filmgoers. She hasn't yet reached the American scene, but notice that she seems to cast an alluring side glance this way, even though she has turned a charming back toward us.

By the first of July most of the boys and girls from prep school and college are at home, ready to entertain the crowd and be entertained in turn by the other young people.

Bottled fruit juices, such as loganberry, grape, pineapple and lime, are reliable standbys.

Sandwich spreads, crackers, cookies, plain and stuffed olives, ripe olives, canned fish for sandwiches and salads, potato chips, marmalade and preserves offer a good selection of foods for the pantry.

Two or three kinds of bread—pumpernickel, whole wheat and white—are desirable in the bread box, too. With the crackers for appetizers and various breads for sandwiches, your young people will be well supplied.

Tiny appetizers, made on a cracker foundation, and open-faced sandwiches are easy to make and attractive to serve. Cheeses of all kinds are delicious with fruity drinks and add much zest to a supper menu.

Roquefort and olive appetizers are made on a toast foundation.

Four ounces Roquefort cheese, 4 tablespoons butter 1-8 teaspoon salt, 1-8 teaspoon paprika.

Cream cheese and butter, working with a wooden fork. Season with salt and paprika, and spread on rounds of hot buttered toast. Make a border of thin slices of stuffed olives. Fimento stuffed olives are best for this.

Anchovy always adds a decidedly swanky touch to foods. Brie and anchovy canapés make tasty mouthfuls. Mash four ounces of Brie with a fork until soft and smooth. Place a small mound of cheese in the center of a small square salted cracker. Make a depression in the cheese and place a rolled anchovy in the center of each.

If you like pumpernickle this appetizer will appeal to you. Mash a package of Liederkranz with a fork until soft and smooth. If you like, add 2 teaspoons beer slowly and blend to a smooth paste. Fold in 2 tablespoons minced watercress, and spread on fingers of pumpernickle. Garnish each with tiny sprigs of watercress.

Hard-cooked eggs can be kept in the refrigerator for days if they are not shelled. Sandwiches of sardines, mashed and seasoned with lemon juice, and hard-cooked eggs forced through a ricer are piquant and pleasant.

An egg salad sandwich is easy to prepare and is a good choice when something a bit hearty is wanted.

Egg Salad Sandwich

Four hard-boiled eggs, lettuce, mayonnaise, white bread.

Cut bread about as thick as you would for serving at the table, allowing one whole slice across the loaf for each serving. Butter evenly and cover with a layer of lettuce leaves. Cover with eggs cut in slices, and top with mayonnaise. Garnish with ripe olives.

Stamp News

By J. S. Klein

ITALY'S first official announcement to the world that Ethiopia now is Italian is by means of a set of new stamps, marking Haile Selassie's fallen kingdom as an Italian colony.

The stamps bear a portrait of Emperor Victor Emmanuel and carry the date of May 9, 1936, when Addis Ababa was occupied by Mussolini's troops. The name of Ethiopia appears in both Roman and Amharic lettering. There are three values.

Cover collectors no longer will receive co-operation of postal officials in Great Britain and its colonies, due to a recent ruling from London that no postmaster cancel stamps on envelopes mailed to him for return to the sender. Of course, covers for collections may be sent through British and colonial postoffices with the aid of unofficial agencies in the various colonies. But that will be quite a difficult undertaking, and so first day and other commemorative covers from these places will be rare and valuable.

Canada, and other self-governing territories, will continue to co-operate with collectors.

There are rumors that the U. S. Postoffice Department is planning to print more of the commemoratives, including the sheet of four designed for the recent stamp exposition, to take care of continuing demands for these stamps. If so, the stamps may be worth not much more than their face value.

Revival Attracts Large Crowd Here

Services Held Twice Daily at Church of Christ, Fifth and Grady

The revival at the Church of Christ, West Fifth and Grady streets, conducted by Dr. H. Leo Boles of Nashville, Tenn., assisted by Gilbert Copeland, regular minister, continues with increased interest and attendance. Preaching services are held daily at 10:30 a. m. and 8:15 p. m.

A lesson in vocal music is given daily at 4 p. m. by Austin Copeland, of Little Rock, who is leading the song service in the revival. These lessons are free and all are invited to take advantage of them.

Each morning at 10:30 Dr. Boles presents a lesson on some characteristic of Christ. He has emphasized that the great task of the Christian is to be transformed and conformed to the image or likeness of Christ, and that one cannot become like Christ, if one does not know Christ; hence the importance of study Christ and learning the characteristics and traits of character of Christ. Tuesday the lesson was on "The Joy of Jesus." Wednesday morning the study was on "The Efficiency of Jesus."

The subject Tuesday night was "Human Responsibility." Dr. Boles emphasized that man cannot dodge God, neither can he evade or dodge the responsibility that God has placed upon him; that man's responsibilities were measured by his ability and opportunities.

His subject Wednesday night will be a further discussion of "Human Responsibility." The public is invited to come and study this lesson and ownship God. Services begin at 8:15.

Wrestling Show Held Despite Rain

Postponement Threatened, But 200 Turn Out for Good Matches

Although threatened by rain the American Legion wrestling show Tuesday night attracted 200 paid customers who witnessed two of the best wrestling matches held here in recent weeks. At a time the matches were reported postponed.

Bob Lasky, the black-bearded Russian, surprised in taking two out of three falls to win from Handsome Dick Moore in the feature event. Lasky took the first flop with the crab hold. Moore downed his opponent with the rolling leg split to win the second round. The deciding fall went to the Russian when he slipped out of a rolling leg split to clasp on the Indian death lock, forcing Moore to give up.

The semi-final match turned out to be a sloping bee between Lefty Wilkins and Fats Baltam, the match ending in a draw.

Williams substituted on the program for Matsui Skihuma, jiu-jitsu artist from Japan, who wired from Tulsa, Okla. Tuesday afternoon that he was unable to make train connections from Tulsa to Hope.

Promoter Mauldin announced that he would attempt to bring Skihuma to Hope for next Tuesday night's show.

Harry Kelley, above, has belonged in the majors for the past six seasons, but, as the round righthander of the Philadelphia Athletics explains, he has been covered up more times than a politician's past life. Connie Mack drafted a real star from Atlanta in Kelley, who won more than 200 games in 10 years in the Southern Association. American League clubs have found the 30-year-old recruit as troublesome as did those of the Dixie circuit.

Behind the Scenes in Washington

By Rodney Dutcher

somewhat as party dogma insofar as these men have held certain New Deal measures to be constitutionally valid and have accused the court's conservatives of deciding issues on a basis of economic prejudices rather than on points of law.

Decide to Take Plunge
Prior to the convention, Roosevelt and his strategists hadn't quite dared make such an argument. "They told themselves the public mind was so unaware of the facts and so worshipful of the court that 'you couldn't make people understand' that since the Constitution was one thing to one justice and another thing to another justice, the court could hardly be considered infallible.

The first official departure from this attitude came in Senator Alben Barkley's keynote speech, through White House instigation. Barkley directly attacked the five justices who killed the New York minimum wage law.

Barkley Sets Pace
"Over against the horrors of Hoover," Barkley said, "for the tortured interpretation of the Constitution, I place the tortured bodies and souls of men who work and pray, of women whose God-given right is not fulfilled in a sweatshop, and of children whom we have sought to restore to the schoolroom and the playground."

Senator Joe Robinson, speaking as permanent chairman, followed with more of the same. Considerable research has been done lately into the backgrounds of the "conservative" justices, and the logical follow-up of the language of the platform and Roosevelt's acceptance speech (either an immortal declaration for human rights or an attempt to "stir up class hatred," as you prefer) will be to show that these justices are "servants of special privilege" rather than friends of the plain people.

Unless planned campaign tactics are reversed, you will be hearing that: Justice Van Devanter is an ex-politician and corporation lawyer, an attorney for the Union Pacific Railroad in its land-grabbing days, who later, as a judge awarded the Union Pacific land along its right-of-way worth millions of dollars—and has decided for the railroad in every major railroad case before the supreme court.

Justice Sutherland was a Republican senator, protégé of Senator Reed Smoot of Utah and buddy of Harding, who, as a justice, has described as an "extraneous circumstance" the fact that a woman employee "needs to get a prescribed sum of money to insure her subsistence, health, and morals."

Justice Butler was a lawyer for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, who, as regent of University of Minnesota, forced out professors who disagreed with his ideas about valuation, rates, and municipal ownership.

And, of course, Hughes was counsel for Standard Oil and many other big corporations and so was Roberts, the latter's clients being the anti-labor union Pennsylvania Railroad.

No one can say now whether such line of attack will be effective. It might turn out to be a big mistake.

Why Gulf is the Gas for the Fourth

GROWN-UPS SHOULD CELEBRATE the Fourth too! Drive somewhere. Do things. But to get maximum mileage use gasoline that's made specially for July weather conditions in this district. If you don't, part of your fuel will blow out the exhaust unburned, wasted. That Good Gulf Gas is "Kept in Step with the Calendar"—its chemical formula is suited to the season. That's why all of it goes to work, none of it goes to waste. Try a tankfull

Bulletins For BRIDES

UNLESS this year is very different from other years, grocers' sales of rice will pick up during the next six weeks. Church organists will suffer occupational fatigue. Tin cans will rattle behind dignified automobiles. And a great many young couples, emerging starry-eyed from the middle aisle, will face Life together and find it full of New Problems.

They have so many things to buy, so much shopping to do, so many choices to make. Furniture, silverware, rugs and blankets . . . towels and toasters . . . soap and soup and cereals.

Fortunately for them, they go forth, budget in hand, into a world of standard values, recognized trade-marks, dependable merchandise. Familiar names, advertised names, will pass their lips naturally as they buy. They will read the advertisements more than ever now—selecting, rejecting, budgeting, buying with a minimum of wasted effort and a definite assurance of value received.

The pages of this paper are full of bulletins for brides, news of the world of goods and services, short cuts to efficient house-keeping. Whether you're a 1936 bride or a 1906 bride, make it a habit to read the advertisements regularly. For the sake of time, economy and convenience, be familiar with standard values when you start out to shop.

HOUSE OF SHADOWS

In this musty old mansion high in the mountains, a beautiful girl risked her life trying to find a jewel she wasn't sure was there. Deep in the gloom of a giant tree's long shadows, she met a series of pulse-quickenning adventures
